About the Seminar :

Globalization is a phenomenon and cultural process which shapes identities and conflicts also Globalisation has changed the circumstances under which language learning takes place and has also posed newer challenges to the language teaching professionals. There are conflicting views among the theorists as to whether globalisation represents reassertion of western hegemony or opens up new possibilities of dismantling the old repressive structures. The present seminar works with the assumption that there is an urgent need to seriously engage with contemporary linguistic asymmetry by using sound theory with explanatory adequacy. In modern times, colonial rule, through differentiated language policy shaped as well as marginalised the regional languages. On one hand English has become the International Language but on other hand Languages like Hindi, Marathi and Urdu are feeling the heat of globalization and many of others are on the verge of extinction. A new pidgin language appeared on the horizon with new e-terminology and Jargons which shook the frame work of language structure in Indian Society the paper readers are expected to explore language policies in India and their intended and unintended consequences in the context of globalization
